New law pain for divorced fathers

JILL STARK

NEW laws designed to give separated couples equal parenting rights are misleading thousands of fathers, with family lawyers and parent groups claiming they are a "joke".

Solicitors are being flooded with calls from fathers who think they will be granted joint custody under the legislation, which was enacted yesterday. Many are devastated to discover the law does not guarantee equal access and that earlier court orders are not covered.

"I've spoken to many family practitioners around the country, and the word I get from them is it's a joke," said Tony Miller, founder of Dads in Distress, a support group for men wanting access to their children. "Many of them think we don't understand that it's not retrospective. They're saying, 'I've had full orders for years, as soon as this law comes through I can rush back to court and get 50-50 custody. They're in for a big shock.'"

The changes are part of the Federal Government's two-year, $400 million overhaul of the family law system.

Family lawyer Stephen Winspear has taken dozens of calls from fathers who think the changes will lead to joint custody.

"There's quite a strong perception that it's going to be 50-50, it's very misleading," he said. "All the publicity is about sharing, but in fact the actual presumption is equal shared parental responsibility, which doesn't say anything about time."

David Scherzer, a family lawyer for more than 30 years, said: "I think that if I'm going to be inundated with calls, and I'm going to have to tell them that I doubt very much that the result they will get post-July 1 is going to be any or much different to what they would get pre-July 1."

Kathleen Swindon, president of the Sole Parents Union, said single mothers were concerned that the changes would lead to custody being granted to unfit fathers. "I have heard from a few women who are afraid their ex is going to suddenly lodge an application for joint custody as retaliation or as a control method," she said.

"Our fear is there will be an influx of cases. And rather than the best interests of the children, these cases will be designed to test the law."

But Barry Williams, national president and founder of the Lone Fathers Association, welcomed the changes. "I think these new laws are going to be the best in 30 years. The non-resident parent is going to feel that they're being treated right, whereas before they virtually had no say."

A spokesman for the Attorney-General said the legislation was clear, and there had been a $20 million campaign to explain it.

FOOD RECALL

KELLOGG'S® K-TIME MUFFIN BARS®
- ALL VARIETIES

Best before dates between 01 May 2006 and 31 July 2006

Kellogg (Aust.) Pty Ltd is voluntarily recalling a limited number of K-Time Muffin Bars packs as a precautionary measure. During an investigation, Kellogg discovered that a small number of K-Time Muffin Bars may contain a triangular piece of thick plastic.

Kellogg's first and overriding concern is always the safety of our consumers and quality of our products and as such we have initiated this recall.

Products that are being recalled in Australia are K-Time Muffin Bars with the below best before dates:

All Best Before Dates between 01 May 2006 and 31 July 2006 only. Dates appear on the top right-hand corner of the box in the format Day Month Year and time code, for example 05 May 2006 0925.

IMPORTANT: This recall applies only to the products identified above. No other Kellogg products are affected by this recall.

Kellogg apologises to all our consumers. We ask anyone with family and friends who may have purchased any of these products to contact them in case they may not be aware of this recall.

Consumers are asked to return any of the recalled packs to store of purchase for a full refund or call the Kellogg Customer Contact Centre on 1800 000 474 for further information or advice.

Kellogg (Aust.) Pty Ltd ACN 094 110 105